The basic idea is that when you click it you would add one minute to a certain variable. I've tried several ways to do it, and I think the best solution is to use a function call inside the onClick method, as it removes the need to bind it inside the script. I just can't seem to get it right, here is what I have: JS: `function add() { minutes = min; minutes = minutes + 1; }` HTML: I have tried also several places, like: `function add() { minutes = min; var minutes = minutes + 1; }` Basically I have tried to make use of the javascript variable and assign it to a html attribute, or create a new javascript variable. A: First of all let me suggest that you don't use min (minutes) as a variable name because it's a reserved name To your question, add is a function because you defined it as such (however, you are overwriting the method in the onclick event as well so you should use this instead, like you said you tried) You have to think about what you want, you mention that you can show the result of the minutes variable in the input but it's not clear what you want to happen, as you are setting it here:

"The story of Elves and Wizards feels more like a fairy tale than anything else at first, but as you keep exploring the town and exploring the various characters, the deeper storyline begins to shine through." - Touch Arcade "The whole game feels relatively complete as it is and exploring it gives a satisfying amount of content for very little money." - PocketGamer "By looking at the screenshots alone, you'd think you've just dropped 50 euros or so and are getting something great. For $15 you can become a god." - The Producer, LLamasoft "When I first heard about this game, I was skeptical. After going through a few parts of it and playing with a few of the monsters, I was immediately convinced that this game would go down as one of the best games of 2016." - SamuraiJaguar "I can't even begin to describe how much this game is fresh, and it really brought me in." - EVPNintendo Neurotrophin-3/BMP-2 enhances cell proliferation and differentiation by combination with neurotrophin-4/NT-3 in the cranial neural crest-derived tissue-culture system. Using the cranial neural crest cell-derived tissue-culture system, in which fating choice of the crest cells (the primary neuromesodermal progenitors of the cranial neural crest) into an endoneurial chondrogenic or perineurial fascial cell fate is regulated by intrinsic factors in the crest cells, we investigated the influence of co-supplementation of neurotrophin-3 (NT-3) and bone morphogenetic protein-2 (BMP-2) on the cell proliferation and differentiation. In the absence of NT-3 and BMP-2, intracellular alkaline phosphatase activity increased as the P-Trk(+) cells attained confluency. The addition of NT-3 or BMP-2 into the medium had an augmenting effect on the intracellular alkaline phosphatase activity. Moreover, cells which had become more alkaline phosphatase-positive on supplementing NT-3 and BMP-2 shared the common characteristics. These morphological and biochemical findings indicate that the cells were differentiated toward a trophic fate. In this study, we provide evidence that NT-3 and BMP-2 have an additive and synergistic effect on the proliferation and

Spatial analysis of economic cost of new technologies: a spatial interpolation approach. In the last century, as the world's population has increased and labour and material costs have risen dramatically, economic decision makers have grappled with the choice of new technologies. Reliance on a single point technology market estimates of the expected cost, the marginal cost or the cost of capital (COC) (the opportunity cost of choosing a new technology), greatly under-estimates the true total cost of implementing new technologies. The proposed authors describe a method for arriving at reliable projections of the total cost of a new technology. The method, which combines selection criteria and probability calculations, can be carried out without using detailed information on the projected output, employment and capital costs of the alternatives. ## What's new:

Elderscroll: Chronicle of the Godslayer - JRPG
Trailer2011-10-11T14:44:30Z

Elderscroll: Chronicle of the Godslayer is a new JRPG that's up for Kickstarter right now. According to the official site, game director Eric Swarts wants to emphasize a more "personal experience and emotion" in games by crafting a story that's more intimately intertwined with the characters. The game follows the story of a knight (like Spikey) who uses magic and weapons to defeat monsters while mapping out an ancient secret history of the world called the Codex. It's unusual in that you'll explore the world's dungeons according to different themes -- say, history or prophecy -- but also that it allows you to change your weapon to face a new enemy type at level up, which has interesting pacing effects.

Elderscroll also has a widescreen mode for older computers and a "tight control" version that no longer has a huge map and focuses on the combat. Lastly, the game has "high-quality custom achievements" that mark 100% completion.

Elderscroll is up for a Kickstarter crowdfunding campaign right now, and it goes for $15,000. That's how much of the game is paid for right now, but if you want to help out, that's
